Women and girls affected by the conflict are supported for their recovery and play a role as actresses in peacebuilding

In 2022, the Office has recorded significant impact in promoting gender-sensitive peacebuilding process, humanitarian assistance and the successful engagement of women organisations in those two sectors. Through catalytic interventions, UN Women continued to defend the work of women rights defenders at local and national levels in critical areas for the country's peacebuilding, namely peace accords and related processes, addressing conflict-related mental traumas, ensuring women's voice and agency in promoting social cohesion and recovery. UN Women has ensured effective and visible contribution, both in quantity of women represented and in substance (thematic areas covered) in the National Dialogue, one of the provisions of the 2019 Peace Accord. Despite that the numeric representation of women remained low (around 8%) in the Dialogue itself, UN Women organized pre-dialogue consultations to ensure that women and women rights defenders from across the country were able to meet and strategize on key thematic areas for the few women delegates to cover during the Dialogue itself. This has been echoed at community level where expected impact of the national gatherings organized by UN Women, include an active participation of women at community level to participate in following up on the Dialogue recommendations' implementation. Cognisant of the role of WRD as first respondents to the crisis, UN Women has placed particular emphasis in supporting their mental health, advocacy power, convening ability and mediation.
