Outcome Description

Extensive programs are carried out in communities to build and foster positive changes in social norms, attitudes and behaviours that will prevent VAWG. Under this outcome, UN Women Fiji MCO is undertaking an intensive pilot project at the community level in Fiji, Kiribati and Tonga which is going to look at the social norms, attitudes and behaviours that contribute to VAWG. The pilot is following the SASA model which is one of the approaches that has proven, evidence based results in reducing incidences of violence at the community level, and stopping violence before it starts. The approach unpacks social norms around violence, power, control and gender inequality”.

STRATEGIC NOTE OUTCOME PROGRESS NOTE

SHOWING DATA OF : 2022

Women and men in target communities demonstrate support to survivors of violence and practice balanced power in their relationships.

The context of implementing a comprehensive, whole-of-population approach to prevent and respond to VAWG in Tonga was significantly different in 2022, due to the unprecedented challenges of the complex emergency of Hunga Tonga–Hunga Ha‘apai (HTHH) volcanic eruption and tsunami, (January 2022), the significant disruption to Tonga’s telecommunication infrastructure and the first cases of COVID-19 community transmission, lockdown and movement restrictions (February 2023). Partners were all supported to re-programme their activities and allocate funding and attention to the immediate needs of the almost nation-wide response to the complex emergency. UN Women contributed by resourcing the delivery of high-quality services and standards with the national women’s machinery and key civil society organisations, especially those in rural and maritime areas, through the Tonga Women and Children Crisis Centre (WCCC), the Family Protection Legal Aid Centre (FPLAC) and robust primary prevention interventions at community, society and policy levels through WCCC and the Talitha Project. WCCC’s radio public messages showcasing women’s resilience and ability to recover and rebuild after a disaster imparted important information that women are not merely passive beneficiaries, but rather can equally be active participants and leaders in response efforts. The WCCC media series Fefine To‘a (Women of Strength) which highlights the resilience and leadership of Tongan women, pivoted following the HTHH emergency to spotlight women’s experiences of the disaster, and women’s important role in rebuilding their communities. Women-led response efforts such as those by women rugby players under the Talitha Project’s Frontrow against Violence (FRAV) provided solutions to people’s real needs immediately after the HTHH disaster. It is an example of how a capacity-building opportunity for one topic (sports as a tool to address GBV) can inspire action in another sector (disaster response), and the value of cross-pollination of ideas and bringing women together to learn new ideas and share with each other. In addition, WCCC’s Ke Tau Malu (Stay Safe) programme addressed the psychosocial needs of children post-disaster. Parents and other adults in communities were also reached in community awareness sessions on topics such as child abuse and neglect in order to transform harmful community attitudes, beliefs and behaviour.
